COMMANDER'S CORNER

It's worth it

by Col. Peter Santa Ana
6th Mission Support commander

Many Airmen, soldiers, sailors, Marines and coasties join the military for the opportunities it provides. Jobs are secure, benefits are great and training is provided. The people are the best in the world. But serving in the military also presents challenges. Many of the challenges are daunting. Deployments are disruptive, moving is stressful, bosses are demanding, and there are constantly new things to learn and more things to do. Sometimes it feels overwhelming. Often service members wonder if it's worth it. I believe it is. Though serving the country and the world presents challenges and demands sacrifice, it also creates opportunities and bestows blessings on every individual who serves.

Whether you are a young or an older troop, enlisted or officer, Airman, soldier, sailor, Marine or coasty chances are you've been stretched by your experience serving in the military. You have likely endured trials and faced frustrations. Many of our members do not know stability, because they have always served during a time of war. Hours are long and expectations are high. What has this done for you? Probably much. Reflect on the person you are now compared to the person you were before you joined. Each of us has learned new skills, met new people, and experienced new things. We have overcome obstacles and assimilated to new environments. We have grown, and the growth has made us better, stronger, wiser.

Anything worth having is worth working for. When it comes to character and personal development, this statement proves especially true. In life, what are the things most worth having? They are the things that cannot be bought, but are earned by engaging in worthwhile endeavors. Family, friends, security, peace, wisdom and integrity grow stronger as we persevere through adversity. Serving the country makes us better because each challenge is a catalyst for growth; each struggle strengthens our values, and each difficulty demands greater performance. As a member of the United States military, the challenges you face provide valuable opportunities not only to serve the world, but also to grow as an individual. The vast experiences of military life build knowledge, stamina, tolerance and confidence in every member. High expectations produce high quality results that not only aid, protect and feed the world but bolster capabilities, performance and achievements of individuals.

As a part of the U.S. military you are a key component of ending oppression, aiding the needy, defending the helpless, and ensuring human rights. Every member contributes important parts to the whole. Your job facilitates the next person's job, and each task combines to achieve the many missions that rescue, defend, provide and enable. Your work is more than a job; it is a part of a whole that brings good to people around the world. Such noble work instills pride. It fosters self-confidence and the ability to accomplish goals. Serving in the military gives you prestige and makes you respected by millions of people who do not even know you, but more importantly, the work you do and the challenges you overcome give you respect for yourself. Meeting demands develops discipline, learning new skills increases value, meeting new people and travelling to new places builds an awareness of who you are in the world and gives you a community to belong to regardless of your lo-

Top wing performers of 2013 honored in ceremony

by Senior Airman Melissa V. Paradise

6th Air Mobility Wing Public Affairs

First there were many, than just a few, now just three. The 6th Air Mobility Wing held its annual awards ceremony Feb. 7, to recognize the accomplishments of 2013.

The Annual Awards Board consisted of six members, the superintendent from each group and the 6th AMW command chief, Chief Master Sgt. Thomas Mazzone.

The board spent endless hours looking at all the nominee's Air Force Fitness Management System Reports, individual biography's and the nominees Air Force Form 1206, which is comprised of 27 separate "bullets" detailing their accomplishments in leadership and job performance, significant self-improvement and base or community involvement. The NCO's had an additional criterion; they had a face-to-face meeting with the board members.

"Each of the board members selected an opinionated question which was asked to each of the nominees, allowing us to evaluate their communication skills, bearing, and knowledge," said Mazzone. "The categories were history and lineage, military customs, courtesies and protocol for special events, dress and appearance, current events, reciting and answering questions pertaining to the Airman's Creed, and a wild card question, asked by me."

Example of service before self turns into valuable birthday lesson

by Senior Airman Shandresha Mitchell

6th Air Mobility Wing Public Affairs

On Saturday, Feb. 1, Staff Sgt. Jonathan Desmond, 6th Security Forces Squadron military working dog trainer, and his wife Lilian, a former 6th SFS Airman, demonstrated a true example of service before self.

En route to their son's fifth birthday party, the Desmonds passed by the Ride2Recovery's Tampa Honor Ride, a charity bicycle ride to raise awareness and funds for adaptive bikes for wounded and injured veterans.

At that moment, one of the riders took a serious fall on a two-lane road. The Desmonds immediately pulled over to provide assistance.

"My wife and I saw the fall at the same time," said Desmond. "She immediately pulled over and removed the first aid kit to render aid to the fallen rider."

While they were helping the first rider, another rider took a more serious fall.

"She [the second rider] had cracked her helmet pretty good," stated Desmond. "So we moved her to our vehicle to sit down."

As they were providing care to the two bike riders, a third rider took an even more serious fall in the middle of the street. At this point, the Desmonds really jumped in with both feet.

"As we approached her, she complained that she couldn't move; and she couldn't feel her legs," said Desmond. "She was getting cold, so my wife took the emergency blanket out of the first aid kit and laid it across her then kept her head stable."

The Desmonds then moved their vehicle to block one lane of traffic, took over directing traffic around the scene, and coordinated with the emergency medical technicians once they arrived.

"Jonathan and Lilian's actions were absolutely critical to the safe resolution of all of these injury incidents," stated retired Air Force

Job Title: Photojournalist

Hometown: Seminole, Fla.

Short-term goals: I'd like to take my wife on a nice vacation for our one-year anniversary. Making senior airman below-the-zone would be pretty nice, too.

Long-term goals: Earn a degree in something useful. Earn a degree in something just for fun. See the world through TDYs, PCSing and deployments. Raise a couple of kids. Retire in my early 40s. Retire a second time in my 60s and never work again.

Advice to others: Don't sell yourself short. There are going to be people who tell you that you're not good enough, or that you can't do it. Forget what they say. If you want to accomplish something big, go out and do it! You owe it to yourself.

Role model and why: My dad. His work ethic, compassion for others, selflessness, and honesty, makes him my role model.

Dating and violence should never be a couple

by Andrea Bowen, LCSW, CFLE
6th Medical Group

February marks the month of love. Many of us celebrate Valentine's Day - the day of amour, in the French vernacular. How would you recognize or define love? What are key healthy elements that are important in maintaining safe and nurturing relationships? Is it a once a year event for you or a lifestyle commitment?

February marks National Teen Dating Violence Awareness and Prevention Month. The National Center for Injury Prevention and Control cite dating violence as a public health problem. Among adult victims of rape, physical violence or stalking by an intimate partner, 22.4 percent of women and 15percent of men first experienced some form of partner violence between 11 and 17 years of age. Approximately 9 percent of high school students report being hit, slapped or physically hurt on purpose by a boyfriend or girlfriend in the 12 months before being surveyed. Victims are often hesitant to speak out and seek help.

How do we prevent dating violence before it starts? Teenagers are in their formative years of building healthy social relationships. Their way of interacting develops early and can carry over into adulthood, which is why it is important to promote healthy relationship skills early. Skills such as anger management, self-control, coping, effective and open communication are important. Additionally, addressing gender roles, expectations and cultural implications are necessary in building positive relationships. What is acceptable and what is not needs to be discussed on an ongoing basis into adulthood. How we demonstrate love is critical.

cation. You become a greater person who is better able to lead a satisfying life.

As the commander of the 6th Mission Support Group, husband to Monica and father to Jacqueline, Peter, Nicholas, Michael, Meredith, Jessica and Sophia I have been greatly blessed. I am grateful for the people who have influenced me, the good things that I have, and for the challenges that created opportunities for me to grow. Deployments, moves, job changes, bosses and colleagues have all stretched me. Persevering through the difficulties has improved me not only as an Airman, but also as a father, husband, and person. The hard stuff has all been worth it.

Maj. James Davis, a bystander at the event. “They stayed at the accident scene for nearly an hour before finally letting us convince them to go on with their big day. Their willingness to stop and render aid was a perfect example of our core value of service before self.”

Desmond said it felt good to help, and that it didn’t take too much time away from their day. After leaving the site, they explained to their son why they stopped and how important it was to assist those in need. Their son learned a valuable lesson and the family resumed his birthday celebration.

munications Squadron. He also oversees the Communications Focal Point which is the hub for all communications within the 6th AMW and many of the mission partners.

“I am extremely honored to be named the Senior NCO of the year,” said Robinson. “I am extremely thankful to my leadership for the opportunities provided and the trust they have in me.”

Some of Robinson’s contributing accomplishments were, earning 12 credit hours toward his Master’s degree and maintaining a 3.4 GPA, being elected as the MacDill Top III president, and overhauling the wings’ tech refresh.

Hudson, 2013 NCO of the year, is the mental health flight chief for the 6th Medical Group. He leads a flight of 47 personnel that provide mental health care, promotes individual and family resilience, treatment of substance abuse, domestic violence interventions and mental health disorders.

“This accomplishment means a lot to me both personally and professionally,” said Hudson. “The year of 2013 was the best year in my Air Force career, so to see the fruits of your labor paying off is extremely fulfilling.”

Some of Hudson’s accomplishments in 2013 include, acting First Sergeant during Combat Skills Training, winning the NCO Academy Commandant Award, the 6th AMW Lance P. Sijan Award and the Air Force Outstanding Mental Health NCO of the Year award.

Finally, there is the 2013 Airman of the Year, Defreitas-Adams, a public health technician for the 6th MDG.

Defreitas-Adams’ 2013 accomplishments include, winner of the 6th AMW Airman 3rd quarter award, selection for below the zone, 90 percent on her career development courses’ end of course exam and numerous volunteer hours.

“I have amazing leadership and peers in my office,” said Defreitas-Adams. “I could definitely say I’m the combined effort of all their hard work; from keeping me motivated, coaching me and spending endless time and effort on my package.”

Her advice to others is all about finding balance in life.

“Find balance with work, school, family, volunteering and spiritual. Be an expert at your job. Do whatever you find interesting and in everything strive to be excellent at it,” said Defreitas-Adams.

These three Airmen represent the best of the best at MacDill.

“The decision was very difficult to make,” said Mazzone. “These few Airmen are representatives of all of the great men and women to serve here daily to ensure our mission is safely executed and our partners and families are supported and cared for.”

And the Chief’s advice to others is, show up early, take initiative, and be the expert others turn to. Then, take the time to lead your fellow Airmen to show them how you got there. Guide them through the “minefield.” The Air Force’s recognition programs are amazing, and distinguish leadership in several professional and functional categories. There are plenty of awards to keep Airmen motivated, but in the end it’s really about helping those we serve with succeed at our mission: Fly, Fight, and Win!”
