COMMANDER'S CORNER

The perfect recipe for 'Compliance'

by Lt. Col. Brian N. Smith

6th Operations Group Deputy Commander

This is not a traditional cooking recipe for cake or corn bread, but rather one for a successful approach to the 6th Air Mobility Wing's year of "conspicuous compliance." Like all recipes, this one contains many ingredients which when combined will culminate in success this November during our Combined Unit Inspection by Air Mobility Command. Each one of the ingredients — proper planning, honest assessments, documentation and attention to detail contribute to the overall quality and outcome of the product. Leave any of them out or get them out of balance and you'll have a recipe for disaster.

The first important ingredient for success in any large task is proper planning. You must fully understand your task by defining your objectives and understanding its scope. In our case, compliance with Air Force Instructions is a given, but we want to showcase our great programs and practices to the command. This is the "conspicuous" part of our compliance. In order to accomplish this, it is imperative we do a fresh and thorough review of our functional AFIs and their supplements. Many have changed recently and we must make sure our programs and their associated checklists comply with the new versions as well as understand those changes.

The second important ingredient is an honest assessment. Take the time to thoroughly cover every area of your AFIs and programs. Now is the time to identify where you need to incorporate new changes or highlight concerns to get necessary attention. Over the last few months, we had many formal Staff Assistance Visits from both external and internal organizations to help check our progress. However, these don't have to be formal. It is always a good idea to take someone who is not familiar or trained in your functional area to review your checklists and programs. If something doesn't make sense to them, or you have to take a long time to educate them on your answers to questions, you probably haven't fully addressed the concern or may need to rephrase your responses to those checklist items.

The third important ingredient for compliance inspection success is to document your progress. You want to be able to tell your story to the inspectors. Many organizations in the wing truly have Major Command best practices already--take the time along the way to capture your challenges and how you corrected them. In other words, help the inspectors highlight your programs to other wings in Air Mobility Command. Over the years, I've seen great examples of presentations in the form of electronic scrapbooks, slide shows and folders. Whatever the method, it should be easily presentable and deliverable.

Finally, the most important ingredient for success is to pay attention to the details. As in many things—it's the small things that matter most. Don't let poor appearance or attitude jeopardize the impression you leave on the inspection team. Dress and appearance violations, sloppy work areas, improper formats, misspellings, non-standard practices or bad attitudes can change a great inspection into a nightmare.

Mixed in the correct order and balance, these ingredients will proclaim what we already know—the 6th Air Mobility Wing not only leads Air Mobility Command in compliance, but it shines proudly as America's Best Wing!

MacDill hosts panel in honor of Women's history

by Airman 1st Class Michael Ellis

6th Air Mobility Wing Public Affairs

In the final high point of Women's History Month, the MacDill Women's History Month committee hosted a panel where attendees posed questions to four unique women March 23 at the base chapel.

Panelists and keynote speakers were: Jane Castor, Tampa chief of police, Judy Estern, AMIkids vice president of support services, Col. Dawn M.K. Zoldi, U.S. Central Command staff judge advocate and Lt. Col. Cathy Almand, Air Force Academy liaison and MacDill Key Spouses group mentor.

"Thank you for being here where we can share and learn together while embracing and valuing our diversity," said Col. David Almand, 6th Air Mobility Wing vice commander, in the opening remarks. "We have some great women in the military at various levels of rank and responsibility. I couldn't imagine the Air Force without them.

"Also I have to be here because my wife is speaking," added Almand.

We fight about how to spend our money

DEAR WING MA'AM: I am so frustrated!!! We get along on most issues, except when it comes to how we run our finances. you have had an argument or two about money. It is the number one cause of divorce...yes, it beats infidelity!

With that fact in the back of your mind, communicate to your spouse about your finances. Remember, money is much more than just currency. It represents freedom, dreams and control. Having a clean understanding of what money represents to each of you provides clarity and is the first step in reconciling your differences regarding money. Next, you're in it together...so, sit down together, be calm and honest. Look at the finances (without criticizing each other) and face the financial situation together.

Communication, exchange key to successful merging of Team MacDill refueling squadrons

by Nick Stubbs
Thunderbolt editor

Teamwork is a hallmark of the Air Force, and a central concept at MacDill Air Force Base, particularly since the 927th Air Refueling Wing transferred from Selfridge Air National Guard Base, Mich., to MacDill in April 2008.

As the fourth anniversary of the integration of the 927th ARW with the 6th Air Mobility Wing approaches, the melding of the two wings into a cohesive team is no more evident than in the coming together of the 6th AMW's 91st Air Refueling Squadron and the 927th ARW's 63rd Air Refueling Squadron.

The realignment success story is one Major Christopher Bragdon knows from the beginning. As a member of the 91st ARS when the 927th came to MacDill to become an associate wing, he crossed over and is now a member of the 927th as a Reservist.

The now chief pilot of the 63rd ARS, Bragdon acknowledges some growing pains along the way, but now that some time has passed and new facilities were built to accommodate the new Team MacDill members, things have fallen into place.

"It's gone well," said Bragdon. "We've done a lot of relationship building, exercises and training and the results were born out during the ORI (Operational Readiness Inspection)."

A more recent example of how well the integrated team works together was the rapid deployment of all MacDill tankers in short order in January, when the base runway was closed for work.

But synchronized excellence between the two squadrons doesn't mean the long histories of the two are lost, said Bragdon.

"We act as one unit, but we maintain our identities and we have separate leadership," said Bragdon, some he is particularly in tune with having been a member of both squadrons.

One of the important factors in the successful integration has been how each unit has learned from the other, tapping into the resources each had to offer.

On the side of the Reservists, there is matu-riety and experience, said Bragdon. The on-average younger members of the 91st ARS have high energy and "new ideas," he noted.

Lt. Col. James Dermer, commander of the 91st ARS, agrees that one of the biggest benefits to the Airmen of the 91st has been ready access to "the experience" of the 63rd ARS.

"They stick around a lot longer," said Dermer, referring to the high rotation of active duty members when contrasted to Reservists, who stay in the same location and work the same jobs for many years. "We've captured that resident knowledge."

Dermer said he liked what he saw when he stepped into the commander's job in May 2011. Since then, there have been even more improvements to tighten the cohesiveness of the two squadrons, he added.

"Communication," Dermer said, has been the key.

"Our DO staffs continuously communicate with each other to get the best possible training for the right people at the right time," he said, adding that integrations like these "start at the top."

"It's a commitment from leadership that we all have the same goals and that we are seeking a common end," Dermer said.

Ultimately, however, such an undertaking isn't possible without the Airmen and other members of the units getting on board.

"In the end, buying in from the people is what makes it successful," said Dermer. "I've seen that here, and it's made things very seamless."

MacDill smorgasbord big hit with Airmen

by Airman 1st Class Michael Ellis
6th Air Mobility Wing Public Affairs

It's been almost a year and a half since MacDill Air Force Base transformed its food services to a campus style dining concept.

With campus style dining, Airmen on meal cards are given the opportunity to choose between five different eateries on base: Surf's Edge Club, Diner's Reef Dining Facility, Bay Palms Golf Course, Ten Pins Bowling Alley and Seascapes Beach House.

Previously, Diner's Reef Dining Facility was the only facility on base where Airmen could utilize their meal cards. Since campus style dining took effect around 300 Airmen on MacDill Air Force Base have been able to benefit from the change.

Some Airmen who have come to MacDill after campus style dining never experienced the one option eating facility, which is traditional on most military installations.

Airman 1st Class Karl Mehta, from the 6th Security Forces Squadron, arrived at MacDill early this year and has only been accustomed to campus style dining.

"I couldn't imagine not being able to eat at all the different facilities," said Mehta, who rotates between the different facilities for breakfast, lunch and dinner.

Mehta compared dining on MacDill to when he attended college due to the many options and varieties of food to choose from.

Diner's Reef closed Jan. 9 for renovations and upgrades as part of the Food Transformation Initiative. When the facility reopens March 31 patrons will notice more seating, faster service and more menu items to choose from.

"I heard the new facility looks nice. There are new big screen televisions, more seating and I'm looking forward to it reopening," said Airman 1st Class Markeiz Ryan, 6th Force Support Squadron.

"Before Diner's Reef closed, I never really ate at other places on base," said Ryan. "Now it's like my eyes are open to all the different options and I'm glad about it. Campus style dining is a great concept and should be at all bases."

New partners, new choices, new chapter for Diner's Reef

Courtesy 6th Force Support Squadron

After an extensive interior renovation, the Diner's Reef Dining Facility will re-open for business March 31 and celebrate a special grand opening April 20 at 3 p.m.

One of the first noticeable changes is the removal of walls, creating an open floor plan with improved lighting. Additional seating has also been added along with relocating beverage stations to the dining areas. The new food zone stations are easier to access and six cash registers will be available during peak dining periods.

In an effort to serve the MacDill community better while also respecting the various military ranks and civilian customer markets on MacDill, a three-tiered pricing structure has been established at the Diner's Reef Dining Facility. The price reflected at the Dining Facility will be the enlisted discounted rate. All other personnel will pay the enlisted discounted price plus 33 percent. The primary purpose of the base dining facility is to feed our enlisted members.

Tier 1: ESM (Meal Card) Customer - No change

Tier 2: Enlisted Members Actively Serving – Discounted Rate

Tier 3: All other personnel – Discounted Rate Plus 33 percent

The 6th Force Support values its customers and appreciates their understanding as they implement these adjustments.

WOMEN

“Many consider me a trailblazer, but I’m just a recipient of the trailblazers that went before me,” said Castor.

In addition to crediting part of her success to her fellow uniformed officers, she also mentioned a unique tie police officers share with military members.

“The military and the police are somewhat the same. Once you swear in, you represent the police or the military and you lose your individuality,” said Castor. “Even though, DUIs and arrests happen every day, the ones that end up in the news are when it’s a police officer or military member being arrested.”

Losing individuality does not always correlate to a loss of power, which was also a topic of discussion.

MacDill’s theme for Women’s History Month is “Women’s Education Women’s Empowerment,” and Zoldi describe how empowerment normally involves others in your circle.

“Seek out people who will empower you. Find them and thank those people because they will be the ones helping you get to where you’re going.”

Castor tacked on a concept to the theme, recommending involving others, explaining that the key to success is surrounding yourself with people whose strengths are your weaknesses.

Speeches were given and numerous questions were answered, and Team MacDill and members of the local community came together with a common goal to celebrate women’s history through education and to empower one another.

MacDill Airmen, chefs: a recipe for success

Story by Senior Airman Rachelle Coleman/ Photos by Airman Basic David Tracy
6th Air Mobility Wing Public Affairs

While most training after technical school is conducted on the job, Airmen from the 6th Force Support Squadron Sustainment Services Flight trained off base with some of MacDill's contracted counterparts.

For three months in three commercial kitchens around Tampa, seven Airmen learned a new style of food service to help improve the quality of dining provided at the Diner's Reef dining facility.

The training helped them update food preparation and cooking methods they intend to put to use in the newly renovated dining facility. The facility closed its doors Jan. 9 to make improvements that will help feed the growing number of patrons daily.

In addition to a new look, the dining facility will have a fresh approach to service by offering more options at meal time. The Airmen who were trained on areas they were familiar with learned quicker ways to prepare the food items and different ways to enhance the flavor.

"We're trying to bring better ways to cook back to the base by interacting with their cooks, learning from their experience," said Senior Airman Brady McDede, 6th FSS Sustainment Services Flight prep cook.

At each training location the Airmen worked with Chef John Hackett, an executive chef. They trained on different stations in a commercial kitchen that included cooking light—a healthy cooking station, an Italian station with pizzas, and an express station with sandwiches, salads and other grab-and-go foods.

"It's going to help me to train the other Airmen that didn't get to learn these new ways that we're trying to incorporate," said McDede.

Hackett has been in the food industry for 25 years and liked sharing a different style of food service with MacDill Airmen.

"It's a chance where they can be surrounded by people who are in the culinary profession, where they can see the passion and how people go about their daily jobs," said Hackett.

"Maybe we can instill some of that passion for food to bring back to the base. It's been a good experience, I really enjoyed it," said Hackett.

Presentation, quality, creating the same look restaurants use to set up with the different stations were part of Hackett's program.

According to Master Sgt. Lisa Lyons, 6th FSS assistant dining facility manager, before the improvements were made to the dining facility the DFAC would serve 300 to 500 meals daily. Now it can serve 1,500-1,800 meals daily.

"The training has impacted the dining facility in numerous ways," said Lyons. "We now have two personnel that are fully trained on the new cooking light station."

Since the new dining facility will provide the opportunity for sustainment Airmen to offer more food to customers, they will be a lot busier than before.

"Our Airmen are able to accomplish more work in a shorter period of time, which is one of the greatest benefits," Lyons said.

Trained by chefs and armed with the tools to provide a new meal experience, the Airmen of the Diner's Reef dining facility are more than prepared to reopen the doors and serve MacDill's workforce.

Sports Talk

by Mack Dill

Hey there Sports Fans. There's so much to discuss this week. I was thinking that I would take the opportunity to highlight Tim Tebow's arrival in New York, but I couldn't figure out a clever way to use the word "excited" fifty different times in this week's column.

Then, I thought I could talk about Tiger-Tiger-Tiger-Woods finally getting a tour win, but that wasn't too much of a shock as much as it was just a matter of time. We all knew it would happen eventually, and I'm glad it finally did. Golf is a lot more fun to watch when Tiger's on his game.

Of course, we could spend some time talking about the opening day of baseball season. Our own Tampa Bay Rays are taking on those overpaid boys in pinstripes – the New York Yankees. Yeah, I said it. According to Sports Illustrated, the annual payroll for the Yankees is $228 million; the highest in the league. The annual payroll for the Rays: $66 million. So even though our Rays make less than one-third of the Yankees payroll, it should be a race to the finish to see which team will win the AL East.

The Final Four has been decided and Saturday's first game will be the Kentucky Wildcats versus the Louisville Cardinals. The Commonwealth is going nuts over this one. These schools are only 76 miles apart on I-64, but most of the state will actually be in New Orleans for this one. Kentucky has the edge. They were the dominating force during the regular season, even if they did have a bit of a stumble in the SEC Championship. They beat Louisville once during the season, but Louisville Coach, Rick Pitino has transformed his team since then. Look for the Cardinals to put more pressure on the Wildcats and play a much more aggressive, up-tempo style. An interesting stat for this game is that between the NBA and NCAA matchups, both coaches (Rick Pitino for Louisville and John Calipari for Kentucky) have met 22 times. They each have 11 wins. Regardless of the outcome, it's always a great game when the two teams face off. I like what Louisville is doing, so I'm hoping for this to be the shocker of the weekend with the Cardinals over the Wildcats.

For the other game, we'll get to watch two, number-two seeds fight it out as Ohio State takes on Kansas. To see how the talking heads are portraying Kansas has got to be the big joke of the tournament. It's hard to find someone who isn't talking about their 7-3 start and poor chances of even making the tournament. Well that was December and this is March. They entered the tournament as a number 2 seed, so they aren't the underdogs they'd like you to think they are. Typical Kansas stuff. One of those wins during that slow 7-3 start just happened to be against Ohio State, so that must count for something. But just as with Louisville, this is not the same Buckeye team that Kansas faced early in the season. They are red hot and playing better than any other team right now. And, quite frankly, growing up a fan of the Missouri Tigers, I can't muster any sympathy for the Jayhawks. I'm looking for Ohio State to run the Jayhawks all over the floor and take the win.

So, ultimately I just don't have it in me this week to go with the favorites and I'd like to see both Louisville and Ohio State in the finals with the Buckeyes taking the championship. You won't want to miss a minute of it this weekend or on Monday Night.

And with the end of March Madness, I'm going to take a little time off from Sports Talk. I plan on spending most of April enjoying baseball and getting ready for The NFL Draft April 26 and 27. So that's it for now. Enjoy the games and, as always, I hope your team wins.
